

venting D'Alba from being taken from them on the way to the police station. Again and again, while two of them aided their horse's flank against him (the king held meantime by policemen on foot), the rest charged the infuriated mob.

At the station the stonemason, who is a mere youth, was able to grasp that he was an Anarchist of the extreme individualist type and that his act was a protest by himself against all law and authority of government. The police are inclined to believe that the king held the attempt to kill the king had been a plot with any plot or conspiracy in which anybody else was concerned.

The mass in memory of King Humbert was at the Pantheon. After the first dash out of the crowd, which made for the place of the attempted assassination, the procession in which the King and Queen rode went forward at its ordinary pace.

Quicker almost than the telephone and telegraph word of the narrowly averted disaster reached those who were waiting along the streets. Every moment the warmth of the recognition given by the people to their monarchs grew colder and colder. From a solemn ceremonial the spirit of the day changed until it was more like a carnival.

KING AND QUEEN APPARENTLY UNMOVED.

Apparently entirely unmoved by their narrow escape, the King and Queen entered the Pantheon and went through the religious ritual as though nothing unusual had happened.

When their Majesties came out of the edifice a roar went up which seemed to spread, echoing, over all Rome. A dash was made for the carriage and the guard had to fight wildly and in the end with savagery to prevent a score of self-appointed leaders from cutting the traces of the horses so that King Emmanuel and Queen Elena might be drawn back to their palace by their loyal subjects.

Through the whole route back to the Quirinal, which was followed just as it had been planned before the attempt on the King's life, the people packing the sidewalks and kept back with difficulty from physical demonstrations of affection waved their handkerchiefs and screamed rather than shouted.

"God save the King-our King!"

Repeated examinations of D'Alba drew from him nothing except a repetition of his anarchistic beliefs, in fact that he was twenty-one years old and the statement that he had gone to the Odessa palace early in the morning and had been hanging around since dawn waiting for a chance to kill the King.

He said: "For a time I thought I would kill Victor Emmanuel, but I am satisfied with what I have done. Nobody investigated me to do the deed. The King did not know of my journey to Major Lang until he was safe in the Quirinal. He at once insisted on visiting his chief of guards at the hospital where he was lying, and for some time by the side of his cot. Major Lang was only partly conscious. It is feared he may not recover."

On leaving the hospital the King said of D'Alba: "Another man belonging to no country—a man without a fatherland."

DOWAGER QUEEN STUNNED BY NEWS OF ATTEMPT.

A most touching scene is reported to have occurred in the palace between King Victor Emmanuel and his mother, the Dowager Queen Margherita. She had arrived there and was waiting for the coming of Victor Emmanuel. At the King and Queen Elena entered they showed no sign and gave no hint of what had occurred. All awaited the mass, and when it was over the King himself told the mother that an attempt had been made on his life.

Queen Margherita appeared almost stunned. She was sitting alone in the room from which she had just come. She was unarmed. They she threw her arms around his neck and kissed him on both cheeks.

Many of those present wished to congratulate the King, but he left the Pantheon too quickly when the news reached the Vatican and immediately sent an aide to get the latest news. Assured that the King was unhurt, the Dowager Queen said:

"I thank God most fervently for having saved the King's life."

D'Alba's mother, who was seen after the shooting, declared that her son when a boy had suffered severely from influenza, pneumonia and meningitis, which had left him weak-minded. Within three months he had been called up for military service.

According to Italian law, D'Alba cannot be condemned to penal servitude for life as he is not of full age. The most severe punishment for him cannot exceed thirty years.

ASSASSIN FIGHTS AS HE HEARS CRIES OF MOB.

D'Alba collapsed in the police station from the stinging the mob had given to him. He was recognized as having been under arrest several times before for small thefts and brutality to members of his family. He came out of his room but faintly and when he heard the angry crowd outside shouting for a chance to finish him.

The demonstration against the youth was diplomatically changed by the police into a holiday of rejoicing, and the people of Rome by tens of thousands left their homes and flocked to the Piazza and marched shoulder to shoulder through the streets cheering and singing patriotic songs.

Prayers of thanksgiving have been ordered in the royal chapel every day for a week. Premier Giolitti published a proclamation saying the assassination of the King at the time when the country was at war with Turkey and was at the height of patriotic enthusiasm would have been the greatest calamity Italy ever faced, and urging the people to join in thanking God for their delivery from such a calamity.

MORSE SHOW LED HIS WIFE ASTRAY, SAYS PERCIVAL

NAMES MANY ADMIRERS.

Married Men Included in List of Alleged Companions in Many Joy Parties.

That all his marital woes were caused by the frequent visits of his handsome young wife, Mrs. Ethel Mae H. Percival, to horse shows and riding academies, was the sensational declaration of Lewis A. Dalrymple Percival, President of the American Real Estate Company of New York, in the Supreme Court today.

Mrs. Percival, who is an expert horsewoman and has been referred to at many big society functions as "the girl with the smile," is suing Percival for divorce. Percival, however, says he already has a divorce, obtained in Reno, Nev., last February.

Percival married Miss Florence Casey, whose father is said to hold an important position with the Western Union Telegraph Company, five days after he obtained the Reno decree, and Mrs. Ethel Mae Percival, contending that the Nevada decree is invalid, has named Mrs. Percival No. 2 as co-respondent in her suit for divorce here.

The first Mrs. Percival, who was married to the plaintiff when she was married years ago, asked Justice Bijur today to direct Percival to pay her $100 a month alimony pending the trial of her case. Opposing this, Percival charged Mrs. Percival with being too friendly with a number of other men.

SAY ONE OF HER ADMIRERS COMMITTED SUICIDE.

Percival's lawyers, May & Jacobson, likened her alleged escapades to those of Catherine of Russia, intimating that one of her many admirers had committed suicide because he was denied the privilege of seeing her, and added that was what prompted Percival to seek the Nevada divorce. After telling of his marriage to the young woman in this city Nov. 3, 1900, Percival said in his affidavit:

"About two years after our marriage the plaintiff became addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, and from that time on sought acquaintance with other men against my protest, and as far as she could declined to fulfill her marital obligations to me."

He said she was continually in the company of one Edward Althoff, who told her that she was in love with him and that he was in love with her, and was seen by me and other persons drinking and carousing with him until finally I found Mr. Althoff access to my home. He told me that he was in love with my wife and if he could not see her he would commit suicide. A few days later he died suddenly. These occurrences with Mr. Althoff took place at Bay Shore, L. I.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY WHITMAN AGREES WITH JUDGE CRAIN.

Continuing Judge Crain says: "You are advised that, as at present informed, in the opinion of the Judge advising you, a negative answer is required to your question, namely, that it is not legally possible for the persons referred to to appear and testify before you in your pending investigation without such persons thereby becoming victims of the provisions of section 24 of the Penal law, immune from prosecution and non-punishable for the crime of conspiracy. Not as though throwing a weight into the balance, you are more entitled to know, and are therefore told, that this advice is given without pretense of reservation of doubt as to its correctness."

In conclusion, Judge Crain suggests the Grand Jurors digest the recommendations he makes and use their own judgment. The Grand Jury retired with his lengthy document to give it due consideration, and as District Attorney Whitman is of the same state of mind as Judge Crain, it is not likely Schiff and Gans will be allowed to testify.

Pending a decision on Judge Crain's advice, the Grand Jury resumed its investigation into the Brandt conspiracy charge.

A. R. Waldron produced documents from the office of the Clerk of the Board of Pardon. Included in these documents was the twenty-two page letter Brandt wrote to Gov. Dix, which, it is claimed by the Schiff-Gans lawyers, he could not have written without aid.

The auditor of a morning newspaper produced the expense bills of a woman reporter named Virginia Tyler Hudson, who worked for the paper five years ago. Mrs. Hudson made affidavit yesterday that she paid for Brandt's meals, which were sent in from a restaurant outside the Tombs and that she was reimbursed by the publisher.

It is said the expense bills did not show any demand for money expended in meals for Brandt. The assignment book of the city editor of the paper, five years back, was introduced. It is said to have shown the woman reporter was assigned to work on a report that Mortimer L. Schiff was paying for Brandt's meals in the Tombs.

He was identified by Mrs. Nabeling and by an insurance man.

ONE DEFENDANT IN SUGAR TRIAL IS DISCHARGED

Indictment Against Thomas B. Harned Dismissed Over His Attorney's Protest.

Called As A Witness.

Government Prosecutor Says He Will Grant Immunity on Conspiracy Charge.

The first incident of sensational character in the trial of the six Trust magnates on charges of conspiracy to violate the Sherman anti-trust law before Judge Hand in the Criminal Branch of the United States District Court came late today when United States District Attorney Wise called Attorney Thomas B. Harned of Philadelphia, one of the six defendants, to the stand and announced that he intended to grant him immunity.

Instantly all attorneys for the defense were on their feet clamoring to be heard. Mr. Wise's move came like a thunder bolt. The first to speak was Attorney Hunt, Harned's personal counsel.

"We object to this most decisively," he said. "My client has been held up to the world for three years as a conspirator. He has been a defendant right along and he wants to remain a defendant. He wants his name cleared by the verdict of a jury and is eager to have his case go to the jury."

Mr. Wise insisted that he had the right to ask that the indictment against Harned be nolle prossed, and the Court agreed with him.

"But," interjected Mr. Nicholl, "the defendant Harned does not have to go on the stand as the District Attorney's invitation. He must be subpoenaed. The law demands it."

COURT DECIDES IN FAVOR OF THE PROSECUTOR.

Judge Hand granted Mr. Wise's motion to nolle pross the case against Harned and a recess was taken to prepare a subpoena under which Harned was called to the stand. Harned was seated at the counsel table, and his lawyer and intimates were in the transaction between the Sugar Trust and the Philadelphia financier and promoter on which the indictment is based.

No one was more surprised by Mr. Wise's sudden move than the old Philadelphia lawyer himself. His face turned crimson with perplexity and anger and his voice shook as he turned to his counsel, Hunt, that he could hardly speak.

"This is an outrage. My client is a lawyer and this indictment has put him in the position of a lawyer who conspired against his client. So-called. Now the District Attorney by one motion wants to dismiss this indictment and force my client to turn State's evidence, as it were, without giving him the benefit of a jury verdict."

But the Court was not of this mind to let such a thing happen. After the minutes recess Judge Hand rescinded his agreement to Mr. Wise's nolle pross motion. Harned was called to the stand and pleaded his right to a jury verdict. The Court agreed and ordered a verdict of not guilty, which was entered. Then the old lawyer took the stand.

Mr. Wise began his examination of Harned by getting his identification of the minutes of meetings of stockholders of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company and other documents he wished to put in evidence.

IDENTIFIES STOCK BOOK OF THE TRUST'S RIVAL.

William C. Pollock, who was registrar of the Real Estate Trust Company of Philadelphia, one of Adolph Segal's concerns, was the second witness today. He was called to identify the book in which the stock of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company was registered at the trust company, so that the government could offer the book in evidence to show the condition of the sugar trust's rival concern at the time the loan of $1,250,000 was made to Segal on the security of a majority of stock in the Pennsylvania company.

Pollock also identified the voting trust agreement between the stockholders of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company, under which they agreed to deposit all their stock with a trustee in order to protect the interests of the company. Mr. Wise got the document
